JURY DISAGREES IN JAMES CASE; OUT ALL NIGHT

Deliberated 18 Hours and 20 Minutes Over The Evidence

THREE WOMEN ON JURY

Judge Discharges the Jurists And Expresses Sorrow Over Disagreement

Disposition of Cases

John White, of Philadelphia: Charge, possessing and transporting intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes; pleaded guilty; sentenced to pay a fine of $250 and costs.

Ethel Burke, of Atlantic City: Charge, being a prostitute; verdict, guilty; sentence suspended.

Marie DeTasi, of Philadelphia: Charge, being a prostitute; verdict, guilty; sentence suspended.

Calvin James, of Willow Grove: Charge, possessing and manufacturing intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes.

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—The jury in the case of Calvin James came back into court this morning and told the judge that it has disagreed after deliberating for 18 hours and 20 minutes. The jury was out all night long. There were three women on it, Mrs. Anna Bagg, Solebury; Katie A. Evans, Durham; Mrs. Emma F. Kinsman, Solebury.

Judge Ryan told the jury that he was sorry that it had been impossible to reach an agreement as it would mean another trial. The jury was then discharged.

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—Charged with the manufacture and possession of intoxicating liquor on the farm of George and John Burkhardt, near Warrington, Calvin James, salesman and automobile mechanic, of Willow Grove, who formerly lived in Doylestown, was tried yesterday before Judge William C. Ryan.

In the trial of the case, Constable A. R. Atkinson, who arrested James, testified that James told him after his arrest that he erected a whiskey plant on the Burkhardt farm and received $100 for doing the erection work, and that he had erected at least 100 similar stills in this vicinity of Bucks county recently.

John Burkhardt, part owner of the farm, who is also awaiting trial on a similar charge, was called as a Commonwealth witness. He said he knew that whiskey was being made at the farm, that Calvin James rented the place from him for storage purposes at $50 a month and on October 5, 1927, erected a still. The witness denied that he paid James $100 to have it erected. Burkhardt testified that James operated the still himself and was at the plant every day, and that he took the whiskey away in cans in his machine.

"James told me when he rented the place and erected the still," Burkhardt testified, "that I would not get in wrong that he was related to Justice James in Doylestown and to Wynne James, an attorney, and that he would be willing to spend $1200 or $1500 to get anybody out of trouble."

Burkhardt testified that he did help several times to unload sugar from trucks but said that he never touched the still or helped to operate it. The sugar was hauled to the place in a Keystone Dairy truck, the witness stated.

Justice Irvin M. James, Doylestown, was then called as a Commonwealth witness. He stated that he heard the defendant say at the hearing that he got $100 for setting up the still on the Burkhardt place and that he had set up 100 others.

"I am no relation to Calvin James unless it is through the famous Jesse James," Justice James said in answer to a question as to whether the defendant spoke the truth concerning his relationship with him.

In defense, Calvin James admitted that he was no relation to Justice James and Wynne James and denied that he ever said he was. He stated that John Burkhardt hired him on October 4, 1927, to do some plumbing at the farm, to erect a gasoline engine and run a pipe line. He denied ever saying that he had erected 100 other stills. He said that on January 9, after Burkhardt had been arrested, he was hired by Burkhardt again, who ordered him to erect a similar equipment on the farm for which he was paid $100.

In addressing the jury, District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, called attention to the fact that several days ago he had made the statement that it was unfortunate that the "high-ups" in the bootleg cases were never caught.

SEARCH FOR MURDERER CENTERS ON 'THE SWAMP'

Slum Section of Newark Is Hunted by Authorities For Torch Slayer

EXPECT ARREST SOON

By James L. Kilgallen

NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Search for the fiend who callously murdered Miss Margaret Brown, cultured governess, by burning her to death when she resisted his advances, centered today in "The Swamp," the slum section of Newark, N. J., and a rendezvous of criminals and dope fiends.

The identity of the "torch slayer," hidden in his letter of confession, which he enclosed with the two $1,000 bonds and one $500 banknote he sent the police yesterday, is believed to be known and his arrest only hours away.

He is a drug addict who comes from a well-to-do, if not wealthy New York family, according to the New Jersey constabulary. They say his fondness for narcotics was engendered while he attended a college of medicine in Greater New York and that he flunked out of the university while within sight of an M. D. degree.

"Within twenty-four hours he will be under arrest," Captain John J. Lamb, of Troop 8, New Jersey State Police, declared this morning.

"The man who committed this crime is known to us. You reporters will be amazed when you learn who he is. He's a man spoiled by dope. Lately he became so notorious about his sniffing of it that New Jersey police got to be pretty wise to him."

The confession was mailed Tuesday which would give the fugitive ample time to get a good start on the authorities if he has left Newark. He said he met the governess in New York City, drove her to lovers' lane alongside Woodland Grove, a New Jersey hot dog park, and when she resisted his advances, struck her on the head. Thinking her dead, he poured gasoline on her unconscious form and put a match to it while she was still alive. She was found ablaze by passing motorists at 11.10 p. m. Monday night.

Other cities in North New Jersey, including Hoboken and Jersey City, were being searched for the desperate fugitive.

GOOD ROADS ASSOCIATION FAVORS LAW FOR USE OF PORTION OF GASOLINE TAX IN BUILDING HIGHWAYS THROUGHOUT STATE

Resolution Sent to State Senator from Bucks District at The Annual Meeting of Association—President Buckman Tells Of Need of Survey for Every Township in the County

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—Three hundred members of the Bucks County Good Roads Association, composed of road supervisors and township auditors of Bucks county, Wednesday met in annual session in Court Room No. 1, where they unanimously passed a resolution that will be sent to the State Senator from the Bucks district, informing him that the organization of supervisors favors a law that will authorize the payment of one cent per gallon gas tax annually to the State Highway Department for the purpose of State Reward in building of highways.

This one cent tax per gallon, is to be taken from the present gasoline tax. It means an income of $6,000,000 annually and would make the necessary money available for State Reward and would remedy the present condition of affairs, of waiting an indefinite time until applications were paid. This resolution is similar to one passed at the state convention of township supervisors held recently in Philadelphia.

Officers elected Wednesday morning for the new year are as follows: President, J. Hibbs Buckman, Middletown township; vice-presidents, William H. Dare, Hartsville, and Florence Rich, Buckingham township; treasurer, Joseph D. Baker, Holland; secretary, Howard C. Holbert, Warrington; delegates to state convention, B. Frank Shutt, Doylestown township; Joseph D. Baker, Holland; W. A. Johnson, Richland township; alternates, William H. Dare, Hartsville, Arthur Bishop, New Britain township; S. B. Denlinger, Plumstead township.

In his inaugural address following his re-election to the office of president of the association, Mr. Buckman, a brother of State Senator Clarence J. Buckman, commented on the recent state convention of township supervisors in Philadelphia and described as a "shameful state of affairs," the election of officers of that convention, that he said was carried out "by lobbying to the fullest extent, resulting in the election of officers because of influence brought to bear by supply men who sell materials throughout the state that are used in road building."

Continuing on another line, President Buckman spoke briefly of stone roads.

"We all want stone roads in Bucks county, of course," he said, "and it would be a nice thing if we could get them, but how they holler when they have a dirt road in front of their place and do not get immediate attention!"

Next the president spoke at length on finances.

"I am not advocating increasing the tax rates for it is too burdensome now, especially on farm land," declared President Buckman, but we need good roads and it takes money to get them. What is necessary, is to get the money and to get it equitably and fairly. At the present time we are not levying taxes equitably and fairly in this vicinity as they do in some."

"The country in the past ten years has changed completely, but our worn-out tax laws are the same in this state. There is no assessor that can fairly take account of the fast-changing real estate values and change of time, under the present laws."

A great deal of the trouble is caused by the so-called lot sellers and promoters throughout the county. These promoters have a farm way out in the country. The farm is cut up

MOTHER AND SON FREED OF CHARGE OF KILLING ATTEMPT

Conflicting Stories Told By Witnesses May Mean Further Hearings

SON BELIEVED INSANE

Commission To Be Named To Examine Youth at An Early Date

Drab tragedy was unfolded in the Bucks County Court of Quarter Sessions at Doylestown yesterday when a son and mother were acquitted of charges of assault and battery with intent to kill on a father and husband. The son, William Walton, a youth 23 years old but with the looks of a man of 35 and possessing a mind of a child of six, was acquitted on the grounds of insanity.

In a separate trial, the mother, Mrs. Sarah Walton, 61 years of age, her body shriveled by a lifetime of household drudgery, also was acquitted but the costs of her trial were imposed upon her by the jury.

The Waltons, father, mother, son and a daughter of Mrs. Walton born out of wedlock when she lived for a time with another man, dwell in a shack little less than a hovel on a small piece of ground near Pineville. The father is a laborer employed in a stone quarry. Mrs. Walton's daughter, like her son, although 18 years old, also possesses the mind of a child of 6.

Last December 5, in the evening, the father, William, returned to his home from the village. The house was dark, and a window in his bedroom was open. Going into the room to close it, a shotgun was fired from the rear of the room. The force of the shell went into the window sill but several of the shot entered Walton's head. The gun was fired by his son.

On the stand yesterday, the youth testified that he had not wanted to shoot his father but that his mother told him to do so.

"She told me to bury him in the cellar and run away and that nobody would know anything about it," he said on the witness stand. "She said that she wanted to get rid of him so that she could go and live with another man."

This Mrs. Walton denied vehemently during her trial.

"William tried to kill his father," she testified, "because he wanted the house and the furniture in it. He bought the gun with his own money and told me on several occasions that he intended to kill his father. I never told him to shoot his father."

Mr. Walton himself said that he supposed his son shot at him because of a grudge that William harbored against him.

"William wouldn't work and I guess he was mad at me when I tried to make him," declared the father.

The man to whom his mother wanted to return is a Neshaminy farmer, William said while on the stand. He explained that his mother had left Mr. Walton some years ago and that it was while she was living with the farmer that her daughter, Myrtle, was born.

At the close of the trial, District Attorney Arthur M. Eastburn, who prosecuted for the State both cases, announced to the Court that he intended to seek the commitment of the mother and daughter to homes where they could be properly cared for. It also is expected that an application will be filed for the remittance of the imposition of the costs of the trial on Mrs. Walton.

Sanity hearings for the son will be started as soon as the court names a commission.

Both Edward Jenkins, jailer of the Bucks County Jail, where the youth was lodged between the time of his arrest shortly after the shooting and his trial, and State Highway Patrolman Pote, testified that in their opinion William was not responsible for his acts.

Pote, who arrested the youth, introduced his signed confession of the shooting into the trial.

Both trials were heard before Judge William C. Ryan. Both the son and the mother were defended by John L. Du Bois, of Doylestown.

A GOOD METHOD

Bristol was host to Bucks County on Wednesday! The words Bucks County may properly be used in this case for the members of the Bucks County Bankers' Association are representative to a great degree of the county, coming from practically every section.

In the words of the president of borough council, Jacob C. Schmidt, as he addressed words of welcome to the group, we were glad to have an opportunity of showing the visitors "how this section of Bucks County has endeavored to live up to the high standard of civic betterment, for which our entire county is so justly noted."

The retiring president of the association, Thomas Scott, is a Bristolian, and shows splendid community spirit as he has endeavored to boost his home-town in his business activities.

With genuine pride, and that justly acquired, those in charge piloted the 150 guests to the main points of interest in the town, at the conclusion of the business session. The growth and expansion of the borough was noted, and the many activities and improvements, here noted.

The best advertisements for a town or city are the concrete results of cooperative legislation—and these Bristol has. The best way to advertise these results is to on every possible occasion bring them to the eyes of our guests, who at once manifest interest. The tale of Bristol's buildings, its streets, its bridges, etc., does not stop with the visitors' stop here, but is passed by word of mouth and by the press to those sections where our occasional guests live. It is agreed that Bristol has much to advertise, and is using a good method to advertise.

ELIMINATING THE JERK

As the conductor of a heavy passenger train gives the signal and the engineer pulls the throttle something like a miniature seismic wave passes from car to car. There is much lurching and plunging, backing and jerking, until the steady puffing of the locomotive proclaims that the train is under way. This applies to most passenger trains, but not to those of several American railroads which are equipping their coaches with roller bearings.

The technical importance of the substitution of roller for plain bearings, indeed the substitution itself, has passed unnoticed by the general public. Railroads are notoriously conservative. They are highly standardized that innovations must justify themselves. Hence the gradual adoption of roller bearings, after incubating in laboratories for a quarter century, is significant.

The man who pedaled a bicycle in his youth knows with what ease he attained his maximum speed, thanks to the reduction of friction by ball-bearings. With automobiles it is the same. And railroads might not have been so slow in adopting them but for several technical problems peculiar to them. It has taken engineering ability of a high order to adopt the roller bearing to heavy loads and unusual strains, and to simplify the means of lubrication and inspection.

Railroads are interested in roller bearings in their present stage of development for railroad purposes, because they promise longer life for rolling stock and make it possible to start trains more quickly and with less effort. And the traveling public is just as keenly interested in them for reasons as obvious.

"BEWARE OF MARRIED MEN," starring Irene Rich, is a Warner Bros. picturization of this novel.

SYNOPSIS

Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a divorce lawyer, to whom she is engaged, believes that her sister, Helene, is infatuated with Randolph Sheldon, whose wife, Nita, is divorcing him. Disguised, Myra goes to Sheldon's hunting lodge to force him to release Helene. He pretends a heart attack and Myra must remain there all night. Helene, cloaked with Ralph Naylor, then, through a misunderstanding, Myra, Helene and Gilbert are all forced to hide in Sheldon's apartment while Nita searches for a correspondent. The sisters escape and Nita, baffled, decides to return to her husband. After a frantic two days Myra explains her story to Helene.

"Myra how can I ever thank you enough. Just think what might have happened. O, Myra, and I'm so happy, now. And I wouldn't give Ralph up for a thousand Hunt- ings. You're the dearest, sister in the world."

"I dare say I am," Myra returned dryly. "But the worst is yet to come. I told Sheldon what I thought of him, and he made me understand that he had kept me there that night for a purpose—the purpose being to let him alone, and if I didn't he would say that I had spent the night in his lodge. And then, just as I was about to go, before anyone had seen me, who should arrive but Mrs. Sheldon. And, O, what a scene!" Myra shuddered at the remembrance. "You noticed today she said something about knowing me better and then remembering who it was I looked like?"

"Well if you ever mention this to Gilbert."

Helene nodded. "Well, that was where she had seen me before, but she couldn't place me—and I don't ever want to see her again, for fear she does."

"Didn't you feel frightened when she came into your office?"

"Of course. And you know the evening you came back home—why, that was only last night, but it seems months ago. But you asked me whether Sheldon had been here or not? Well, he had been here, but I was afraid to tell you. He wanted to let his warning sink in, and also to tell me that his wife would probably recognize me if she came into the office very often."

"Oh, I see. Well, I knew he had been here, for certain. But you didn't seem to want to talk about it, and I couldn't say much then."

"How did you know that?" Myra asked.

"Well, I walked over to the table and I saw the stubs of his cigarettes with his initials on them."

"You clever child!"

"Oh, no, it was quite plain. And that's what gave me the idea he was after you. Isn't that funny? I was just as worried about you as you had been about me. At first I thought that perhaps he might have got some hold over you on account of something I had done, and then I came to the conclusion that you had fallen for him, just as I had, and my first idea was to go to him and try to force him to give you up. So as soon as I got up this morning I phoned him. But how did you happen to go there?"

"I knew you had phoned him."

"But how?"

"Why Mrs. Sheldon arrived at the office looking for Leonard, and she was all excited, and wanted to tell someone about it, so she picked on me. She said that Botsthat terrible detective—had 'tapped' Sheldon's wire, and they had found out that a girl by the name of Helene was to meet him at his apartment at two thirty. O, what a sinking feeling I had when she told me that."

"I can imagine, Myra. And then —"

"Well, at first I was delighted — I mean when she started the story about having discovered the woman, and I thought that let me out very neatly. And then suddenly she said that the woman's name was Helene. I almost went mad. I phoned here, but you had evidently left. I phoned Sheldon. He was out. So I decided that I'd go to the apartment and get you. I couldn't understand why you had called him—especially right after your marriage, and all that."

"It must have sounded terrible to you, Myra. But I was so worried about you I didn't know what to do. I made Sheldon think I wanted to see him, and as soon as I arrived at the apartment he tried to kiss me. And then I started to threaten him, and insist that he give you up."

"He must think we're both a bit off," Myra laughed.

"Well, at least it runs in the family. Anyway, we're both safe and sound—but O, what an experience! Myra, after this I promise to listen faithfully to everything you tell me, and I'll never be so naughty again."

"It's Ralph's turn to look after you now, thank goodness," Myra was becoming more and more cheerful.

"But, Myra, after this you must promise to tell me absolutely everything. I'll really listen. Now, will you promise? If you had only explained to me I'd never have called Sheldon, and then neither of us would have gone there."

"But it has one redeeming feature," Myra suggested. "If we hadn't gone there Mrs. Sheldon would still be looking for evidence — she wouldn't have gone back to her husband, and I'd still have had to face her visits to the office without knowing when or how I was going to be discovered as the woman she had met coming out of the lodge on Sunday morning."

"Yes, that is a good ending," Helene admitted, "but I want you to promise, just the same."

"All right, I promise. And you?"

"Solemnly! Cross my heart and hope to die. Helene repeated the childish formula. "O, and another thing Myra, are you going to tell Gilbert anything about this?"

"Not if I can help it. I won't." Myra shook her head. "You know it would be terribly hard to explain all this to anyone."

"I shudder at the very thought!" Helene grimaced. "Well, then, I'd better not tell Ralph."

"No, I think that the least we can both do is to let the matter drop, and forget it as much as we possibly can. Though I promise to throw it up to you if you don't behave in the future."

"And don't forget, I have a wonderful sword to hang over your head," Helene retorted.

"Well, if you ever mention this to Gilbert—"

The ringing of the door bell interrupted the conversation. "Speaking of angels," Helene giggled.

Myra opened the door to admit Gilbert. He came into the room, a newspaper under his arm.

"Say, this is rather amusing," he threw his top coat over a chair with his hat and opened the paper. "What?" Helene ran around behind him and peered over his shoulder. "O, Myra, look," she called her sister.

"What is it?" Myra came and looked too.

Headlines spread across the top of the front page of a scandal sheet caught her eye.

"The Divorcing Sheldons Start On Their Sixth Honeymoon!" she read.

"Well, I wish them luck," Helene laughed.

"And so do I," Myra echoed.

"And so do I," Gilbert smiled and put his arm about Myra. "But we'll probably see them in the office in another year or so," he added cynically.

"O, I hope not. They've caused trouble enough," Myra shuddered.

"You needn't worry," Gilbert teased her. "You won't be there. You'll probably be having your own troubles to attend to."

"Never, never, never!" Myra vowed. "At least—not divorce troubles. You'll please keep all those in your office, Mr. Gilbert."

BRADFORD, Pa., Feb. 24 (INS).—The oldest resident of Jamestown near here, is going to take her first airplane flight soon, relatives here said. She is Mrs. Catherine Featon, 104, visiting at St. Petersburg, Florida, where the air trip will be made. She has traveled via the ox-cart and the automobile, the old-time sailing vessel and the modern steamship.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Feb. 24 (INS).—Plans for the sesqui-centennial celebration of the Wyoming Massacre to be held during the summer are progressing rapidly. The many committees are laboring industriously to make the celebration one of merit.

Plans, thus far completed, call for a monster chorus to include all male and female choruses in the valley and a pageant. Other features will include gigantic parade, historical exhibitions, musical, festival, fire-works display and athletics.

The buildings will be decorated with electrical effects, during the celebration.

NEW CASTLE, Pa., Feb. 24 (INS).—This city may soon have an airport, an aviators' training school and airplane-passenger company.

The three units will be part of the same company.

Local aviation enthusiasts who are behind the plan are John S. Crowl, Glenn Latimer and Attorney Orville Brown, all of New Castle. They plan to make application at Harrisburg on February 23. The corporation's title will be New Castle Aircraft Incorporated.

FARRELL, Pa., Feb. 24 (INS).—Stenography headed the list of occupations which the feminine members of the Senior High School here declared as their desired avocations in life, it was revealed by a questionnaire answered by the 187 girls in the three upper grades of the high school here.

The survey showed stenography was chosen by 89; teaching by 41; nursing, 27; secretarial work, 9; physical training and music, 4 each; drama, 3; commercial work and accounting, 2 each; dress-making, millinery, library work and "clerking," 1 each.

One girl wants to become a detective and one wants to study journalism.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 24 (L.N.S.).—"Is modern youth really on the down grade?"

No," Dr. Thaddeus L. Bolton, head of the department of psychology at Temple University says it is not. Dr. Bolton vigorously defends the boys and girls of today against their critics. These critics he terms "moral rain clouds, who, in every age of the world, have continually croaked the approach of a devastating moral storm."

"It is claimed," said Dr. Bolton, "that the youth of today have given themselves over to cigarette smoking, girls as well as boys, that girls color their lips; that they give themselves over to dancing and cabarets; that they have cultivated andress, rather than dress effects until there no longer is anything sacred or secret about the human body; that they use to excess poison liquors that have come with prohibition; that divorce has become so common that one marriage in six is annulled; that love of children does not exist; that mother love is dead and mother ambition no more.

He said that the boys smoke more than they can; that their liquor excesses have set new records; that they will work in 'white collar' jobs and do no more than they can; that they dishonor their parents; that to them women and girls have ceased to be objects of respect; that they show no restraint, know nothing of repressions of prohibitions. It is charged that the two sexes seem to be in a contest as to which can reach the deeper levels of moral degradation.

"Such accusations and charges as these against the youth of our time seem to the wholesome-minded to be filled with exaggeration. There is just enough truth in some of them to give the appearance of plausibility. People are behaving in these ways now and some always have done so. But that does not mean that such people are moral imbeciles. There is no considerable part of the population afflicted with such excess dispositions. They do not out-number the strong and stable elements of society.

"Society is trying out various realizations of social restraints to discover whether these restraints may not be given up.

"Our colleges have fallen under the denunciations of the modern rain clouds, and yet, out of sight, there are to be found in all the laboratories of scientific research in numbers greater than can be properly accommodated, young men and women working with the highest zeal and devotion solely in the interests of discovery. These are the things that ought to be broadcast to turn away the faces of some from the degenerate tendencies of today.

"There never was a time when it was more fun to live than now. There never was a time when we could feel so much assured about ourselves as today. We are not fragile creatures strait that may have been worn out, justment, directed by increasing what youth nowadays are doing or whose lives can be wrecked by the The society that has been built up knowledge stands in no danger at all leaving undone," Dr. Bolton concluded. disregard in youth of a social re- through several thousand years of ad- of being swept out of existence by ed.

Tax for Road Cost

ventions and that many of the "ten cent resolutions" that used to be passed one after another, have been eliminated. He said that the important resolution passed at the state convention two weeks ago favored the reformation of taxation in Pennsylvania.

Representing the State Highway Department, Mr. Stackpole, of Upper Darby township, declared there are over 10,000 miles of roads in Pennsylvania at the present time that have no right on the highway systems. He too, said that a great number of promotion schemes have cut farm land into lots, and that such roads were a burden on the taxpayers when taken over.

"I do not believe in too much criticism of the supervisors by the State Highway officials, and the same holds true the other way about," declared Mr. Stackpole. "In this district I want the co-operation of everybody and we will render you the best of service."

Supervisors were urged to rally for State reward even though it is slow coming through, Mr. Ward, of the State Highway Department contended. He also urged supervisors to distribute the repair and construction work as evenly as possible in their districts. He called attention to the fact that three State Highway Department representatives in this district have 197 townships to look after.

H. F. Felton, of Harrisburg, representing the State Highway Department told the supervisors "to place your work where it does the most good, to plan on the most important highways first.

"That system," Mr. Felton continued, "will eventually eliminate the useless roads of which there are over 10,000 miles in the State, many of them a mortgage on the township in which they are located. I do not believe that roads are being vacated as fast as they should be. Simply present your petition to Court of Quarter Sessions, averring that the road is useless and not needed and a jury of view will be appointed. If favorable action is taken by the jury, you will then be relieved of maintenance of that road by the Court. But just as long as you have roads under your care, you will be liable to keep them in repair. Do all your work on a budget system as outlined by the state department.

"Then too, the individual taxpayer can do his part in co-operating when it comes to repairing roads. As supervisors, it would be well for you to do a bit of advertising and keep the public informed on what you have done and what it costs to do what you plan to do."

Henry A. James, of Doylestown, solicitor for the Bucks County Commissioners, stated that the County Commissioners are deeply interested in the equalization of assessments. He described the unfair assessments as a crying evil. In Morrisville, he said, the assessments were readjusted so that an increase of $1,000,000 resulted and not one single protest was entered.

Frank Shutt, supervisor of Doylestown township, during the open discussion at the afternoon session said: "We are asleep as an association when as individuals we simply come here to talk and do not act." He had previously asked whether it was not possible to get more money for state reward and followed up his contention by making the resolution that was unanimously carried, that the State Highway Department should receive annually a one cent tax per gallon on gasoline for state reward funds.

Before adjournment, the fact was mentioned that the Doylestown township supervisors had been arrested for failing to maintain a certain stretch of highway.

"I think it is an outrage when taxpayers stoop so low as to bring action against supervisors under such conditions," declared President Buckman. "What all of us could be placed under arrest and if such action continues, it would be well for all of us to resign. And then to think of it, taking road supervisors before a Justice of the Peace who places a fine on them, in spite of the fact that everything that is humanly possible, is being done by them. Such action should be taken before a capable Court, and I understand it has been in this case."

A New, Thrilling Novel..

"Gun Gospel"

by W. D. HOFFMAN

Starts Next Sunday In

THE INQUIRER

"A spurt of flame from the adobe buildings smote the gunman's eye. The Bull Mesa men were starting their offensive, covering the advance of their leader Granger Hume hesitated for only a second, his revolver barrel found the range by instinct, and the weapon barked in unison with a fusillade from the adobes."

All this action takes place before the first instalment of "Gun Gospel" is more than fairly well under way. Who was this victim of the feared Granger Hume—the terror of the plains? Why, as the result of this shot, did he disappear from his old haunts to live again, for a short time, as "Parson John of Toro Town?"

Never was a more exciting story written than this thrilling account of Parson John's continuous battle with bandits, with local politicians, and with himself. Each instalment will keep you on edge for the next! Each has more than its share of breath-taking incidents! Be sure to read every word of this modern story of the old West!

THIEVES CRACK SAFE IN DOYLESTOWN SCHOOL

DOYLESTOWN, Feb. 24.—Thieves last night broke into the high school and cracked open a safe from which they obtained between $500 and $600 in cash. They then forced a closet in the domestic science department and obtained some small change from a cup.

After gaining entrance to the building the thieves broke a glass partition and pushed the safe over onto the floor and cracked it open with a pick which had been obtained from the basement. Every desk in the building was broken open in the search for money.

The school board today offered a reward of $200 for the apprehension of the person or persons guilty of the robbery.

Finger print experts were brought from Philadelphia and John J. McGuckin, chief of the Bristol Police, who was thinking court was called in on the case and asked for an opinion as to whether it was the work of an expert or an amateur.

SID TERRIS EXPECTED TO OUTDANCE INVADER

By Davis J. Walsh
I. N. S. Sports Editor
NEW YORK, Feb. 24.—Street merchants glibbed above the roar of the elevated as a baby boy came into the world some twenty-odd years ago in a gas-lit flat of the lower East Side and they called him Sid Terris. At or about the same time, a low-back car, coming out of the mists of the distant peat bogs, rattled over the cobble streets of Belfast, Ireland, the music of its wheels playing an obligato to the plaintive protest so unmistakable of the newly-born. Then all was stilled, even the dread cry of the banshee.

For the baby that was Jimmy McLarnin lived more or less happily ever after and even saw the day when he came to America, probably with the half-formed notion that the police force needed at least one more good man. But, happily, it didn't.

Nor did the streets of the East Side really need another business man, although by circumstance and environment Sid Terris seemed destined to grow bearded and moderately rich at the helm of his own push cart. But, happily, the streets didn't and Sidney didn't and so there will be 18,000 people at Madison Square Garden tonight to see two careers, begun thousands of miles apart, bisect at least.

They will meet under the glare of the ring lights in a ten round bout for the right to challenge for the world's lightweight championship and, if romance really is dead, then my story is a vain one, indeed. For these young men, so lowly of origin, now are of a rank sufficiently exalted to attract a matter of $55,000 into the house and one of them may yet know the day when a world's championship is his.

Terris, the East Side's own, generally is regarded as the man who will do this. This town is ever skeptical of the product who is so ill-advised as to do his winning elsewhere and so McLarnin's fights with LaBarba, Villa, Fields, Sangor, Kaplan, and Wallace apparently have not been accepted at face value. Neither have Terris' visitations upon the floor at the behest of Goldstein, Wallace and McGraw in recent fights.

They expect Sidney to outdance and outbox the invader and all week long have been backing their judgment at odds of 8 to 5. Terris himself claims to have laid $1,000 on his chances at 7 to 5, and any time a young man like Sidney bets a thousand dollars, even if he only says he did, he must think he has something good.

McLarnin money has been almost incommunicado to date, but the writer looks for the odds to shrink today. At least one sharpshooter I know is picking McLarnin to win by a knockout—at the proper odds—and another is getting down on him to win the decision. These men deal only in critical money and, as soon as they start shooting, the panic will be on. It wouldn't be surprising if dollar for dollar prevailed when the two principals go to bat.

On Saturday, the guests witnessed a basketball game between Swarthmore and Rutgers, the score being 37-10 in favor of Rutgers. A swimming meet against Fordham University was also held and Rutgers were victors again. In the evening, the different fraternities had "open house" at which time the guests were entertained by dancing. Mrs. Miller returned to her home on Sunday.

Judge Ryan before sending out the jury to deliberate directed that James could not be convicted on one of the three charges, that of possession of utensils for the manufacture of intoxicating liquor, but that the case would go to the jury on the charge of manufacture and possession of liquor.

John White, of Philadelphia, charged with possessing and transporting a truck load of beer, of 4.4 percent alcohol, pleaded guilty yesterday and was sentenced to pay a fine of $250 and costs. He was represented by Wynne James, Jr., of Doylestown, the load was taken on at Easton and was being transported along the Easton and Philadelphia highway to Philadelphia when police stopped the truck near Pipersville.

Charged with a crime when they were found at the Swope Farm near Langhorne on December 3 when the place was raided by State Police, Ethel Burke, 23, of Atlantic City, and Marie DeMasi, of Philadelphia, were found guilty yesterday by a jury. Judge Ryan suspended sentence in both cases and told them to keep out of Bucks county or to behave themselves when they were in Bucks county.

Bulletin To Print Life of Lindbergh

Ever since Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh captured the imagination of the world by his achievement of flying alone from New York to Paris everyone has been eager to learn the details of his life and the steps by which he trod the path to success.

This has been exemplified by the manner in which the public has received his own personal narrative of his life. It bears the short title of "We," after himself and his airplane, the Spirit of St. Louis.

When he announced, after his flight to France, he had a story to tell, the world sensed it would be tremendously important. How important they could not know until "We" appeared in print. Its appearance gripped the world so surely that today it is establishing a record not matched by any piece of writing within the past twenty years.

Colonel Lindbergh's own story of himself and his great flying feat will be published by special arrangement in the columns of The Evening Bulletin, of Philadelphia, beginning February 25. This is a noteworthy date in that it only comes once in four years, but to readers of The Evening Bulletin it has a special significance because the first chapter of "We," together with a glowing foreword by Myron T. Herrick, U. S. Ambassador to France, will be theirs to read just as the Lone Eagle himself wrote it.

Once the story is started no one will want to miss it, so compelling is its power as the chapters of the life of this extraordinary young man unfold from day to day. It is written without adornment and tells the whole drama of Lindbergh's youth and young manhood in a simple style that makes it truly great.

Parents will want their children to read it for the example it gives of the sturdy manliness of unspoiled American youth overcoming the obstacles which hampered his climb to success. Every word of it is an inspiration to the youth of today, not necessarily for emulation, but for the lesson to be learned of fixing one's purpose in life.

Teachers will want their pupils to read it for its literary value. Apart from its intense interest as a narrative it is an excellent example of method in construction. His choice of words reveals a large vocabulary and the art of writing with a sparing use of florid adjectives.

In "We" Lindbergh takes us through his school and college days and shows his leanings toward mathematics and engineering. Behind them is the dream of learning to fly.

He tells how he bought an old plane which had many ailments and how he learned to fly it after a brief course of instruction. It required so much care and attention it gave him a thorough schooling in airplane mechanics.

His "barnstorming" trips through the United States seeking passengers to pay $5 apiece for a ride in his old Jenny airplane are some of the most interesting features of the early chapters. Battles with storms and unexpected thrills in all kinds of flying make "We," an epic which a modern Homer might write of an Ulysses of today.

All the incidents of his life lead definitely up to the climax, his "lone eagle" flight across the Atlantic ocean.

This epic of the air begins in The Evening Bulletin on February 25.
